Addressing Intimate Partner Violence During the COVID-19 Pandemic

August 6, 2020
1-2 PM

Featuring:
Stacy A. Ogbeide, PsyD, MS, ABPP

The coronavirus has created isolation, job losses and increased stress levels. All these factors increase the risk of domestic violence, which has risen due to the coronavirus. Home, for some, can be a dangerous place. On August 6, 2020 at 1 PM, Dr. Stacy Ogbeide, a Board-certified clinical health psychologist, will present a live webinar for WCHQ members that focuses on identifying, screening and referring to treatment for intimate partner violence (IPV) to help clinicians address IPV in their practices during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Dr. Ogbeide is the director of behavioral health education and an associate professor with the family medicine residency at UT Health San Antonio. She is a proponent of integrating behavioral health into primary care settings and is highly regarded for her contributions to the profession, having received the Integrated Care Champion Award of the Missouri Psychological Association and an Early Career Psychologist Contributions Award from the Association for Psychologists in Academic Health Centers.
